

The experts you need for growing muscles, bones and joints

Protecting your child is what you do best. But you can't always prevent a broken arm or leg. Or soothe away other problems with your child's muscles, bones and joints.

That's when you need Cleveland Clinic's pediatric orthopaedic specialists.

Specialty care...near you

We understand that children aren't just small adults. That's why Cleveland Clinic specialists treat orthopaedic problems in children differently. Treatments vary by a patient's age, development and size.

Whether it's a fracture, ACL tear or scoliosis, we know just how to treat your child. And we can do it at one of our convenient locations near you.

Conditions we treat

No condition is too complex for our pediatric orthopaedic specialists. Some of the most common are:

- Fractures – broken bones are one of the top reasons children see an orthopaedic specialist.
- Scoliosis – an abnormal curvature of the spine, which sometimes requires surgery to reposition and fuse the spine.
- Congenital conditions – such as hip dysplasia and rigid flatfoot.
- Extremity deformity – such as bow legs and clubfoot.
- Sports injuries – including ACL tears, meniscus tears, joint dislocations, stress fractures and growth plate injuries.
